The historical facts about the Armenian genocide are now well-established with a large community of scholars engaged in the field and a growing internationalization of its memory. Knowledge is based on solid historiography and a vast corpus of documentation. Despite the virulence of Turkish state-sponsored denialism, there is a broad consensus among scholars on the processes and mechanisms of the genocide. Although early research was largely conducted by descendants of victims and memory activists, from the 1980s on the field has gradually developed to become more professional and academic. Since the 2000s, there has been a significant increase of research studies and academic publications, a growing diversification of topics and approaches, and the discovery and translation of many new sources and testimonies.

Nevertheless, the study of the Armenian genocide often remains confined to restricted circles of specialists and interdisciplinarity is rarely promoted. And, despite the valuing of comparative research, it is frequently reduced to the juxtaposition of case studies. Research on the Armenian genocide is now ready to address more cross-cutting issues and broader discussions on mass violence.

This conference asks: how can the social sciences, memory studies, and genocide studies contribute to a broader understanding of the Armenian genocide and its aftermath? And reciprocally: what is the contribution of research on the Armenian genocide to our understanding of mass crimes and to the social sciences?

We welcome innovative and comparative papers on the Armenian genocide addressing issues, debates, findings, and reflections raised in neighboring and even distant academic fields.

Scholars from a wide range of disciplines are invited to present their research, including from history, literature, sociology, psychology, anthropology, linguistics, art history, musicology, law, political science, philosophy, and so on. Multidisciplinary discussions are also very much appreciated.

Participants will commit to presenting unpublished research and to sending their paper to the organizers one month before the conference. Selected papers will be published as conference proceedings in the bilingual (English and French) peer-reviewed journal Études arméniennes contemporaines <https://journals.openedition.org/eac/>

Proposals should be no more than 500 words and accompanied by a short biography of no more than 200 words. English and French are the working languages of the conference.

Please send your proposals to schaeffercenter@aup.edu by September 30, 2024.

Limited funds for travel and accommodation are available for presenters in need. If you wish to apply for a grant, please include a one paragraph statement explaining your request for financial support.
